His principal phenomenal 3-year-old trotter owned It is expected that he will die. near Mooreville, which he was positive could trot a mile in three minutes. An Ypsilanti horseman suggested that Verne might be mistaken in the speed of the colt, and the result of the suggestion was a wager of $50, the bet to be decided by a trial of the speed of the colt near Lake Ridge, forthwith. Four Ypsilanti horsemen accompanied Bruner to Mooreville, and after arriving there it was learned that the proposed trial of speed could not take place—the wonderful colt could not be secured, for some reason. The full amount of money represented in the wager, had been placed in the hands of a stake-holder and the stipulations were such that it was paid to the Ypsilanti man, upon Bruner's failure to produce the colt. Bruner was sorry, and said so, and said more; but the Ypsilanti men kept the stakes.

The Day We Celebrate.

A Harmless Observance in Ypsilanti, but the Usual Horrible Harvest of Deaths, Accidents and Property Destruction Throughout the Country.

The peculiar form of celebration which in the present day and generation especially attaches itself to the fourth of July, shooting fire crackers, sending up sky rockets and balloons, and utilizing everything in the way of explosives that the ingenuity of men has been able to provide, has been spasmodically indulged in during the past week in this city, and culminated Monday, in a roar and a bang and fizz from daylight until midnight.

The enterprise and liberality of the eastside merchants and business men provided a very creditable display of fire works for the depot section of the city Saturday night, which was witnessed by hundreds of people from all sections of the city and country, but aside from that the celebration here was entirely a matter of private enterprise and personal choice.

The Fourth was generally observed as a day of rest by those who remained in the city, but little business being done except by the restaurants and dealers in fireworks. The base ball games at Detroit drew all the lovers of the national game, from this city and the various other attraction in Detroit inclusive, are the dates fixed for the aud elsewhere, together with society week. picnics and private pleasure parties, reduced the population of the town to about one-third its usual proportions. No accidents of a serious nature occurred here during the day. A picnic under the auspices of the Sons of Temperance was held in Arnold's woods, and another near the residence of Mr. Chas. Howlett, south of the city, both of which were attended for the greater part by Ypsilantians.

The harvest of accidents and loss of life and property brought about direct-Association are, President, Joe Sanders; ly and indirectly through the American method of rejoicing over their longago asserted independence, was unusually large this year. In Detroit the list of accidents was fair to medium, several hands and fingers being shot off, but up to the present time no death has been announced.

Two young men, Carl Snedicor and Robert Reed were killed at Ithaca, Mich., through the bursting of a bundle of fire-rockets. Four other persons were more or less injured.

The Harvest of Death.

LAMBERT A. BARNES.

When the message flashed over the wire last Thursday afternoon that Mr. Lambert A. Barnes had passed suddenly away, at the Detroit Sanitarium, it seemed incredible. And even now Courier, an enthusiastic bycyclist and a after having borne him to the cemetery and laid him away it is impossible to realize that we shall neither see him again, hear his cheery voice, nor feel the warm clasp of his hand. While the friends have a certain shrinking from laying bare in any eulogy the private life and tender memories which are sacred, or of applauding his public activities, yet it seems fitting that certain respect should be shown the memory of a man who held so high a position and was so identified with people at large, and also that those who have known him and learned to love, admire and respect him, and who were so deeply shocked at his death, should give some expression to their feelings. He had been suffering from trouble with his left lower jaw for some time, and, following the advice of Dr. Mc-Lean, went to Detroit June 18 and submitted to the removal of a part of the bone. No serious trouble was anticipated, and up to Wednesday night his relatives had no other expectation than his speedy recovery. On Wednesday night, however, symptons which had hinted of pyæmia made alarming development, and Thursday morning Mr. Barnes became unconscious, continuing so until his death.

Mr. Barnes was born in Connecticut in 1826 and lived there with his parents, school during the earlier days of his ents to Catskill-on-Hudson, where he resided until early manhood. His first business life was spent at Huntington and Chickipee, Mass. In 1858 or 1859 he came to Michigan as overseer of a new paper mill which had been recently erected by Chapin & Wood, at Geddesburg, and while employed there, met Miss Jane Geddes, whom he married three or four years subsequent to his arrival. After three years of active life at Geddesburg, Mr. Barnes established a paper store at 118 Jefferson avenue, and carried on business there under the firm name of Cornwell & Barnes until the close of the war, when he took up his residence in this city, removing from the Geddes farm where he had resided during his Detroit venture, and became president and heavy stockholder in the Peninsular paper company, which operated a mill built here in '62 and built a new one at the spent the greater part of last week in ter club, the score standing 12 to 10 in time of his coming. Since then he has continued in the same office. Mr. Barnes has been a public-spirited man all his life and a person of keen sympathy with the distressed. He has held various municipal trusts, being three times mayor of Ypsilanti, and at the time of his death a member of the Presbyterian church, President of the of the First National bank.

To those who stand upon the brink of the grave and watch the form of their beloved lowered quietly to its silent resting place, amidst the depth of grief, and though the heart be breaking with its burden of sorrow, it is a sweet consolation to know that there is left behind no tarnished name, no rememberance of clouded character, no hoping against hope, but only memories of loving unselfishness, unquestioned uprightness, purity and nobility of character, "a good name," too preccious to be valued-and above all. the bright hope that as he passed lightly "through the valley of the shadow presence of his Redeemer, he leaned upon "the rod and the staff" of the Eternal One who "comforted him." and that he dwells in that presence "to go no more out forever."

"Ben Hur."

Thomas M. Nichol, of New York, writing to the Louisville Courier-Journal says: I have just happened to read your grateful and merited tribute to General Lew Wallace and the famous book "Ben Hur." Indulge me in a bit of the queer history that may have had an influence in making the fame of a book and the fortune of an author. A few days after General Garfield was inaugurated president, I was taken sick, and while confined in my room in the Ebbitt House at Washington, wanting something to read, I sent to Mrs. Tyner's room and asked her to lend me something to read. She sent me a number of books, among them "Ben Hur." When I got able to be out I was up at the White House one evening to dinner. President Garfield asked me while we were dining how I had entertained myself when housed up. I replied, telling him the books I had read, and among them "Ben Hur. "Tell me about Ben Hur," said he, "does it amount to anything-is it worth reading?

I assured him it was. "Tell me why," he persisted; "what makes it worth reading?"

I answered, if it's pure invention, it's good invention; and if it's anything like a correct picture of the times, people and incidents it deals with, and the result of study, it's equally good from that standpoint, and, I added, the fellow who wrote "Ben Hur" ought not to be sent to South America—if you want to send him anywhere send him to Jerusalem or Egypt or Turkey, where he can have a chance to see and study orientalism, or the traditions of it where it has been.

He said to one of the little boys: "Irvin, you go to the hotel with Mr. Nichol and he will give you a book; bring it to me." Two days after I saw him again; he said he had read "Ben Hur" "at two pulls" after going to bed the two previous nights. Lew Wallace had been nominated to go to Uruguay. He immediately recalled the nomina-tion, and returned the name for Minister to Constantinople, and at the same time wrote Lew Wallace a very complimentary letter on "Ben Hur," which has since been effectively used by and woe. I sometimes think that the publishers as an advertisement. I am told that it is now the most popular selling book on Harper's list, and by several librarians the oftenest inquired for book in the library.

These little accidental incidents will continue for many years to keep up an interest in the book, and would do so none the less without being thus definitely told, but the striking thing is the illustration of the acute literary taste of the man who, harassed with cares as Garfield then was, would snatch the time from sleep to read a book the size of "Ben Hur" in two nights. If the book proves that General Wallace ought never to have been a general, this incident proves that flinches with fear, instead of his tak-President Garfield ought never to have ing the catamount, the catamount been a President.

Italian Emigration.

Italian emigration, especially from the old Neapolitan provinces, in 1883 had risen to to 169,000, and it is rising by 10,000 to 15,000 a year. Of this outpouring more than half reaches South America, where it is believed more than 870,080 Italians are now settled in the valley of the Platte alone, toward whose schools the Roman government, with a wise foresight, contributes £50,000 a year. Sir Horace Rumbold, in his work on the Silver river, just published. describes Buenos Ayres as filled with Italians, who, though perfectly orderly and peaceable, every now and then manifest in some gathering or festival, their overwhelming strength. It is by no means impossible that the states of the Platte may become, without violence, by the natural operation of emigration and a full birth rate, Italian colonies. Political power, as yet, however, still remains in the hands of the Spaniards. - Philadelphia Telegraph

Polyglot Perplexities.

A person speaking only the English anguage may meet with amusing incidents while traveling in Europe. For example, an English clergyman stopping at a Swiss hotel, desiring ink, out his "phrase-book," looked it carefully through to find the French word for ink, and failing in his search, concluded to ring his bell and "sail in on his English." The chambermaid came to the door, and he said: "Will you bring me some ink?" She stood statue-like, and he repeated, "Ink!-Ink!-Ink!" She closed the door, but very soon returned, and asked him partly in French and partly in En-glish whether he would have it warmed.

Again, on one occasion, I gave a railroad conductor in Germany a small silver coin, in order to have the compartment we were in all to ourselves. After riding for some distance we came to a station where he was replaced by another conductor. Before leaving, he came, opened our door, and said something to us in German. Supposing he desired to see our ticke.s, I extended my hand with them, at which he shook his head. We then thought we must change cars again, having ridden at least twenty miles without doing so, and all rose up; at which movement he a second time shook his head. We next decided that it certainly must be time to have our baggage vised, since at least four hours had elapsed since the last examination, and we accordingly pulled down our valises, and started for the door; whereupon our conductor not only shook his head, but pushed us back and shut the door. ward learned that he, through innate politeness, and in return, no doubt, for the small silver coin I had given him, was simply endeavoring to bid us good-by.

While going up the Rhine we saw four English gentlemen on the deck sitting together. They called a waiter and ordered "lemonade for four." The waiter went away, was gone nearly half an hour, and at last appeared with ham and eggs for four Nor was he astray as to the sound of the order, different in nature as were the viands he brought, as anybody with a bad cold will perceive, if he will repeat the words, "ham and eggs," and "lemonade" alternately .--American Magazine.

Bloodhounds.

Every time dogs are put on the trail of a criminal the telegraph is sure to say they are bloodhounds. Now, there are not many bloodhounds in this country, and we venture to say that of the few there never was one of the breed used in trailing men. The dogs which before and during the war used to track runaway slaves were always spoken of as bloodhounds, but they were nothing like the animals of that breed. They were a cross between the Siberian dog and the long low hound so much used by Southerners in hunting. The strain of Siberian blood gave the result of this crossing the large head and short ears, as well as size, and the strain from the hound gave the animals the sharp scent which enabled them to follow a trail after its making. These dogs were ferocious, while the true bloodhound is anything but that. The dogs seen running in the streets here which are called bloodhounds come from the stock used for the purpose described in the South, but are not so well bred. They are more of a cur as a general thing. A thoroughbred bloodhound is one of the handsomest dogs that lives. He is a large, heavy-boned animal, with long ears and a broad, pleasant face, with brown eyes, which, on account of the red always showing, are considered by people who do not know better an indication of savageness. The bloodhound is a dog much mis-represented. He has a bad reputation ch he never earned himself, but was given him by persons who knew not what they were talking about. Rochester Union.

IT is reported that Allen G. Thurman has pronounced himself in favor of the renomination of President Cleveland. It can now be assumed as settled that Ohio will go into the democratic convention against Cleveland. Ohio democrats have a peculiar habit of throwing up their hats for the "Old Roman," as they had for applauding the sentiments of their old war horse, Durbin Ward, but since the John Mc-Lean and Allen O'Myers' regime has been in possession of the democratic wires in Ohio, the old leaders have been forced to accept applause as their only reward for service. RUSSIA, not content with revising the political geography of Asia, now proposes to revise its physical geography. The river Amoo or Amu, the ancient Oxus, which rises in the mountains of the Chinese border, runs west sixteen hundred miles and empties into the inland Arab Sea, four hundred miles east of the Caspian. According to the testimony of antiquity, the Oxus formerly ran to the Caspian Sea, and it is deemed practicable to divert the stream from its present course not far above its mouth and cause it to flow through its ancient traditionary course to the Caspian. That would give Russia direct steam navigation to the heart of Asia, the scene of her longtime operations to match the prestige of England in the great continent. To turn the course of a mighty river like that would be a work almost equal to the proposed conversion of the desert of Sahara into an inland sea by cutting a large as peas. WHAT IS PROTOPLASM?

The word is from the Greek, meaning literally, first form. Webster defines it as "the viscid, nitrogenous material in forward; the vital vegetable substance." The definition is too narrow, in limiting the substance to the vegeta-WE are not disposed to join in the ble kingdom. In Johnson's cyclopedia we find this clear and concise definition: 'Animal bodies either consist of homogeneous substance, or of that [the same] substance disposed in tissues. or exhibiting structure is chemically identical throughout the animal kingdom, and constitutes the living part of plants. It belongs to the class of protein compounds, and is called gelatin, during his recent southern tour. We albumen, fibrin, etc., or, regarded don't believe the southern people care structurally, protoplasm." Protoplasm, then, by these definitions, is the basic material of all animal and vegetable organisms, the agent of the vital processes, and, stymologically, the first form of life. It can be seen, under the microscope, carrying forward the vital abandoned principles. Let us have processes. To know that that can be seen, and to see it, are two very different things, as we realized recently when, through the courtesy of Mrs. Osband, we were permitted to observe it through one of the excellent instruments at the Normal School. We had known, as we know anything that we take on the authority of scientific investigators, that the eye can see the protoplasmic atoms doing their work in a living organism, building up the tissues in the processes of repair and growth; but we had had no such realization of the fact as the peep through the microscope gave The subject of experiment was one of the cilia, or minute hairs, from the stamen of a flower, which appeared under the glass like a pale green, transparent object wider than a man's finger Irregularly disposed through it were several dark spots of circular form, probably globular, which were protoplasmic atoms, if we may use that term The were all at rest, and appeared as instrument, we were told, they would resume their work. We had not long to wait. In two or three minutes, one commenced to move slowly in a right line, and then it increased its pace, and after some distance it changed direction obliquely until it reached the side of the hair, and stopped. It seemed to Michigan papers that are assisting in be distributing its substance in an almost transparent stream behind it. snarling and kicking at it would change and was apparently slightly reduced in their methods they might succeed in size. Then another and another moved, making it apparent that there "is no and sometimes two or three at once, the most of them keeping straight lines along the length of the hair. One approached another standing at rest directly in its path. Just before contact, it swerved around the obstacle to the same line on the other side, and

Those things - creatures-whatever they may be-were building up the them for a common end. There is no structure of that part of the plant, as all living structure is built up, and as they are seen to do in animal as well as in vegetable organisms. It is very by the cooperation of good men for plain that none of the definitions tell us what is protoplasm. Were those living creatures? How could they move? Matter cannot move itselfwhat moved them? Capillary attraction, one says; but how could capillary attraction cause those particles to move about in the tube of that vegetable hair main in it or join the party with which erratically-now resting, now moving. now halting; now in one direction, now in another?

TORTURING A PRISONER.

Horrible Scene in a Chinese Court of Justice-Terrible Tortures.

I was just in time to see the torturing in its most aggravated form. The victim was an old thief and every effort was belast crime. A long bench had been placed upon the floor. Thrown upon his back upon this bench, the wretch had been tied to it by thin, stout cords, knotted at one end around his thumbs and toes, and the other end to hooks behind. The bench had then been placed upright upon one end, so that the only means of sustaining a human weight of 160 pounds were the slight, sharp cords that cut right down to the bones of the thumbs and toes. The legs and feet were bent back so that the knees were terribly vegetable cells, by which the process of cramped and the ankles almost dislonutrition, secretion and growth goes cated. The shoulders were bent back by a pressure that threatened to pull the bones of the arms from their sockets. The joints of the thumbs seemed no longer of any use. A stout, villainous looking subordinate was laying with all his might a long split bamboo stick across the naked thighs of the unfortunate accused, who writhed and groaned under the added punishment. Red welts rose from every blow, while great drops of perspiration stood out upon the brow of ne poor sufferer.

The magistrate at length motioned the whipper to stop. The examination re-commenced, and renewed efforts were made to compel the accused to confess a crime, which, perhaps, he had never committed. The examination and the torturing had been going on for an hour and a half. In the case of this particular person it had been only a repetition of what had taken place several times before. But he had borne it bravely and had not yet given in. If he held out long enough he might be released; per-haps he might be ordered off to execution, but if he confessed he was certain to lose his head. It was impossible for me to await the end of the so called ex-

I hurried out, but as I went my attention was called to several peculiar instruments; one a piece of curiously shaped but heavy wood, with which, while a criminal was tied up by his thumbs and toes, he was beaten upon the ankles until the ankle bones were broken; another, a leather strap fitted to a piece of wood, with which he might be beaten across the face until his jaw should be broken and his teeth knocked out, or loosened so that they would drop out; the terrible bastinado, with which, stretched upon the floor, he might be beaten upon the soles of his feet. Only a couple of days before my own visit to this Canton court of justice, five prisoners, tied up by thumbs and toes, had been tortured and beaten until they had fainted, and all five thus insensible were still hanging in the open court room, while the examination of a sixth conscious wretch was being conducted. In the hallway, when I went out, were other poor criminals awaiting their turn. All were heavily shackled. Three with joints dislocated and ankles broken were seated in bas-kets, in which they had been carried from their cells, and in which they would soon be carried into the court room to be strung up as they had been time and time again before. They were scarcely conscious. All in heaps, they seemed, thrown into the baskets, with their legs and arms dangling out, their heads bowed down upon their breasts.-Canton Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Food That Paris Consumes.

Some interesting figures with regard to the consumption of food in Paris have recently been published in France, from which we take the following details: It 303,894 oxen, 188,595 calves, 1,979,536 sheep, and 352,004 pigs were killed at Adding to this the 7,662,412 pounds of horse flesh which was sold for food, 157 pounds of meat is the average consumption of each inhabitant. The largest number of cattle came from the provinces, and the rest was supplied by Germany, Switzerland and Austria-Hungary. Besides this an average of nine pounds of tongues, livers, kidneys, calves' heads, twenty-three pounds of fish twenty-two pounds of poultry and seven pounds of oysters per inhabitant has to be added to the consumption of meat. It will appear strange that the average of seven pounds of oysters falls on each inhabitant of Paris, the more so as the poorer classes contribute largely to raise the average. It is stated that the oyster for which there is the greatest demand at Paris is that known as the Portuguese oyster, the flavor of which has been improved by some new experiment in the growth of oysters .- Pall Mall Gazette.

The still charming and beautiful consort of the Prince of Wales is notoriously lacking in the power of keeping her engagements. She is constantly ten minutes late. So marked is this characteristic that when circumstances necessitate her presence at an exact time she is purposely misinformed as to the hour. A writer in The Brooklyn Standard says that he was once on board the Osborne, one of the royal yachts. The prince and princess were using the boat for their annual summer cruise. A ball had been given in their honor at Cowes, and the prince, in full dress, was pacing the deck awaiting the advent of the princess from her dress-ing room. Finally the little lady made her appearance, but as per usual ten minutes late. "Tut, tut," remarked H.

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's' Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed hosts. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

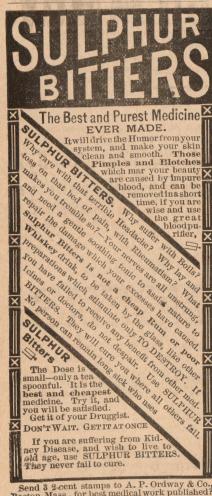

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for lief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

TAMERS OF THE GROUND.

There is conquest of force in taming the horse Till he brooks to be driven and bound. In he brooks to be driven and bound,
But prouder by far the victories are
Of the men who tame the ground—
Who tame the ground and its willful powers,
And determine the work it must do,
Till it leaves its own and executes ours,
With additioned deaths and these With obedience docile and true.

For they are true workers together with God In maturing the earth to his plan,
And in teaching her dull and unmeaning sod
To glow with the thinking of man— Who compel her rude life to surrender the wold,
The marsh and the jungle to yield
To him who can out of her deserts unfold

The wealth of the fruit bearing field. Delights there may be on the restless sea, Though treacherous, barren and bare; But the grateful land ever blesses the hand That tends it with wisdom and care. Then health to the heroes who tame the ground And hold it in bountiful thrall, For they lap the earth with their conquests

DO WE EVER FORGET?

Cultivation of the Memory-The Need of Severe Discipline.

The quality of the mind which we call memory has been well likened to a storehouse, into which have been thrust, with out any definite order or arrangement, precious things and worthless things, priceless treasures and useless rubbish. The mechanical task of selecting from the confused heap a particular thing which is needed is called an effort of the memory, but should rather be called an arousal or excitation of the memory; for it is all but certain that from the vast storehouse nothing ever disappears, nothing is ever lost, only when we cannot find just what we want at the time we want it, we say we have forgotten.

It may be a bold assertion to say that we never forget; that is, that nothing is ever absolutely lost beyond the possibility of recollection, or regathering, as the word means, but the facts bear out the claim that in the strict sense of the word we never forget. It is a common expression to say that one person has a much finer memory than another; but it only means that the one has the power of selecting and arranging, which the other has never cultivated, or which has become weakened through disease. It is undoubtedly true that some have a higher natural power of this kind, just as some men's muscles are naturally stronger than others; but the faculty ex ists in all who are of sound mind, and can certainly be cultivated to a degree which seems extraordinary to those who have never looked into or thought upon the subject. Cultivation of the art of memorywhich, by the way, is a singularly exact expression for the process—is a matter upon which much thought and attention have been bestowed, and as to which opinions have widely differed. The literature of mnemotechny has become very extensive and many systems of artificial memory have been devised to help those whose ideas and associations lack sequence, and who do not know how to set about the task of recollecting. But all these are outside the real idea of cultivating the memory. They are aids to an unused or untrained faculty, nothing more. They are simply the applica-tion of mechanical force to help out a weak or enfeebled muscle; they are not the muscle itself.

The memory can be cultivated. strengthened, made efficient and accurate in only one way-by systematic and persistent exercise. It does not differ in this respect from any other human faculty, whether of mind or body. Muscle and intellect are subject to the same rules and the same conditions; use strengthens, disuse weakens. An inefficient, feeble memory must be put under rigid discipline and exercise systematically, and especially used in those directions in which it is most defective. Memories differ very widely, as to the objects which they grasp with ease or difficulty. One remembers dates with accuracy, another is always uncertain about them; one remembers faces perfectly, another always confuses them; one remembers the sequence of events, another is never absolutely certain as to historic order or precedence; one recol-lects only the gravest and most important affairs, another only froth and non-

Each case of uncertain or defective memory calls for his own treatment, and that is severe discipline. A poor memory for dates can be made better by hard study of chronology; the useless faculty of remembering trivial things can be cured by an exclusive study of matters of consequence.

We have said that the natural memory differs widely in different people, and history furnishes many incidents of per-sons remarkable for the strength of their memories; but the wonderful feats performed by these only establishes the truth of the general proposition, that we never really forget anything, just as remarkable instances of muscular development demonstrate the latent power of the muscle and show the extent to which the forces of the human body may be increased.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Last night about dusk she went to the coal-shed for the purpose of getting some kindling, and remained so long that a member of the family went out to see what detained her. She was found lying in the shed with a gag made of old rags in her mouth, insensible. Everything indicated that she had been the victim of a foul assault.

She was taken into the house and medical aid summoned. At the same time the police were called in. An examination of the premises and surroundings convinced the police that there was a mystery to be solved. When the girl regained consciousness she told a story to the effect that she was splitting kindling when a man came into the shed from the allev and struck her, and then placed the gag in her mouth. The fire department Ridge this morning about 5:30 o'clock, in was called out and rendered efficient serwhich one white man and six negroes were vice, but the fire had gained too much killed and several white men dangerously wounded. The following particulars of the affair are given: Yesterday a negro living in the vicinity of Oak Ridge assaulted a white girl, He was arrested about 7 in the evening, and when the deputies were taking him to the calaboose they were fired upon by Jerry Baldwin, colored, his two sons, and three other negroes, wounding Deputies Baker and Gardener, and releasing the prisoner. The negroes then disappeared and later rendezvoused at a negro cabin two miles from town. On learning their whereabouts it was proposed to lynch the negro. Before daylight this morning a party of whites went to the negro's house for that purpose and were fired upon by the negro and his friends. One of their number. George Higginbotham, was instantly killed, and John Gonger, Deputy Sheriff; T. G. Brigham, editor of the Morehouse Sentinel, and Messrs. Milmore and Baker were wounded. The whites returned the fire with deadly affect, killing six of the negroes, including the accused. As soon as the news spread the negroes from all surrounding country flocked to town, and Sheriff W. P. Douglas, with a posse of twenty armed men, left Bastrop for the scene. At noon to-day bodies of white men are moving from Girard and other points toward Oak Ridge, and a conflict between the whites and blacks, with most serious results to the latter, is momentarily expected. THE CAMP FIRE.

NAPOLEON AFTER WATERLOO.

Whether any course was open to Napoleon after the disaster of Waterloo other than that which he adopted. a second abdication, is certainly very doubtful.! Had he taken the precaution to dissolve the chambers before setting out on the campaign, he probably could have rallied the nation and protracted the struggle. But the chambers were unfriendly; any parliamentary body is naturally unfriendly to a military despotism, and, at that juncture, nothing less than a military despotism could possibly have saved France from the calamity of the restoration of the Bourbons by foreign bayonets. Hence, unless Napoleon should execute a new coup d'etet, there was nothing for him but abdication.

On the 15th of July, 1815, Napoleon surrendered himself on board the British man-of-war Bellerophon. Of his appearance and bodily condition during the two months of his stay on this vessel we have an interesting account in the narrative of Capt. Maitland, who commanded the ship Maitland describes him as "a remarkably strong, well-built man, about five feet seven inches high, his limbs particularly well-formed, with a fine ankle and very small foot, of which he seemed rather vain, as he always wore. while on board the ship, silk stockings and shoes. His hands were also very small, and had the plumpness of a woman's rather than the robustness of a man's. His eyes light gray, teeth good, and when he smiled, the expression of his countenance was highly pleasing; when under the influence of disappointment, however, it assumed a dark, gloomy east. His hair was of a very dark brown, nearly approaching black, and though a little thin on the top and front, had not a gray hair among it. His complexion was a very uncommon one, being of a light, sallow color, differing from any other I ever met with. From his having become corpulent he had lost much of his personal activity, and, if we are to give credit to those who attended him, a very considerable portion of his mental energy was also gone. It is certain his habits were very lethargic while he was on board the Bellerophon; for, though he went to bed at 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening and did not rise until about the same hour in the morning, he frequently fell asleep on the sofa in the cabin in the course of the day. His general appearance was that of a man rather older than he then was .- Scribner's Magazine for July.

LINCOLN'S PRAYER.

The following touching story of Lincoln is related to me by Col. Dayton, to whom I am already indebted for several excellent morceaus of reminiscence

"Shortly after the battle of Gettysburg Gen. Sickles, badly wounded, was brought to Washington by some members of his staff and was taken to the private house of a Mr. Dule, on F street, opposite, or nearly opposite, the Ebbitt House. The brave hero of many a hard-won field was very near his last muster. The morning after his arrival President Lincoln, with his boy Tad, was announced. He walked with solemn step into the room where the General lay hardly gasping. We all thought he was dying. Dr. Simms was holding his pulse, and as Mr. Lincoln approached the bedside with Tad he was much affected. He raised gebic Meat & Provision Company. The his head to heaven, while big drops of tears fell from his eyes, and offered up the most fervent prayer I ever heard. Not a dry eve was in that room; all, even Tad, were sobbing. I can not remember the exact words of the prayer, but this portion will never effaced from my memory: 'Oh, God, let me not lose all my friends in this war.' Mr. Lincoln was very fond of Gen. Sickles, and visited him almost every day, and sent flowers of the choicest kind to his room daily from the White House conservatory."

Washington Hatchet. A FUNNY EXPERIENCE.

"I remember a funny experience I had during the war," said a leading physician to-day: "I was up at Camp Dennison examining the conscripts, occurred last night. The main portion and many heart-rendling pleas for exemption I had to refuse. One day a farmer, a German, a peaceable minded fellow, who thought lots more of his turnips and cabbage than he did of military glory, was brought in to me. 'Doctor,' he said, 'I am not fit to go to the war, I am all crippled up with the rheumatism.' 'Where?' said I. 'In my right arm; I can only raise it yoost so high,' raising his hand about two inches from his body with great apparent effort. 'Well, you have got it pretty bad,' said I; 'you certainly can't go to war in that condition: how high could you raise your arm before you got the rheumatism?' Oh, so high,' said he, raising his arm high above his head. That was just what I expected, and giving him a push I sent him along out to be sent to the war."_ Cincinnati Times Star.

And I did want it; I was tired and a little hungry, but I would have fainted before I would have accepted such an invitation. And you went away a little bit vexed with me and had your coffee and bread and butter by yourself and didn't enjoy it very much. In effect you said to me: 'If you want a cup of coffee, if you really want it, I will buy it for you.' You are the best husband in the world, but do as nearly "Oh! hang it!" cried Jasper, "this is all the best husbands do. Why do your wives when you fairly throw 'Come, let's get a little coffee and something, and take me right along with you? You wouldn't say to a man, 'Would you like me to go and buy you a cigar?' Then why do you always issue your little invitations to treats in that way to me? Indeed, indeed, my dear husband, if men would only act toward their wives as heartily, cordially, frankly, as they do toward the men whom they meet, they would find cheerier companions at home than they could at the club."

Worley was a boy on his mother's no baby-hat about that; it was like ing near by, had walked over to make farm near Allen's Springs, Ky. Young as he was he could plainly see and realize the lamentable condition in which the war had left his home. He went out to see. was, therefore, constantly haunted by the idea that he could work wonders toward retrieving their losses by the freeing of slaves, etc., if he was turned loose in the world. So thoroughly was right over where Bennie was standing he imbued with this idea that one day he quietly stole away, and started he knew not where. After a short tramp he found himself in Bowling Green, Ky., but, finding nothing he could do, he drifted down into Mexico, believing firmly that there his fortune awaited

Worley could hear nothing from his ever. mother, and believed beyond doubt that she was dead. He therefore lost all his former pride about returning home with much wealth and asking his mother's forgiveness, and at the first opportunity presenting itself he joined the United States army and went west, when he remained for five years. Returning after that time, he went to St. Louis and embarked in the railroad business. Here he fell hopelessly, helplessly, and recklessly love with a rare and radiant little blonde, and wooed and won her. He continued his work in this line until he became very proficient in his business—so much so, in fact, that his services were sought after by several railroad corporations. He, however, accepted the position of general superintendent of the Hot Springs and Malvern Railroad company, which position he holds at present.

The other Sunday night the names of G. D. Worley, wife, and son were registered at the Morehead house, in this city. It was the same G. D. Worley that passed through this city twenty-two years ago, a barefooted boy of 17 or 18 years of age. He is now a fine-looking man, was handsomely dressed, and his wife and son, who is now 13 years of age, looked the perfect picture of health and happiness. McGlynn could see a comparison between himself and Luther a few weeks ago, and he now insists that his case is near the same as that of Galileo. The comparisons may serve their purpose when printed in red letters on lecture announcements, but it is not probable that Rome will exhibit as much concern over his theories as she did in the cases of Luther and Galileo.

THE emperor of Russia has a salary of $8,250,000; the sultan of Turkey, $6, 000,000; the emperor of Austria, $4,000-000; king of Prussia, $3,000,000; Queen Victoria, $2.200,000; Isabella of Spain, $1,800,000; Leopold of Belgium, $500,000; President Cleaveland, $50,000, while the Governor of Michigan serves the state for $1000; and even that sum may seen extravagant in the eyes of the Ann Arbor editors, just now.

Mr. L. Allerd, a Kansas man, attempted to do the editorial work on the Moran Herald during the absence of the regular editor. He was shot dead on the morning after the appearance his second paper, by an indignant subscriber. Poor man. But doubtless he is hap pier now, in that land where indignant subscribers never go; and even death may have come to him as a welcome release from a two week's struggle with a country newspaper.

The loneliness and silence that pervades a college or school town during the first week or two after the departure of the students, reminds one of Moore's deserted banquet hall, Whose lights are fled, Whose garlands dead, And all but he departed.

The plug hats of the senior boys and the coquettish Tam o' Shanters of the girls are missed from the streets; the boarding clubs broken up; hammocks are empty, ice cream saloons deserted; moonlight nights are unappreciated, and the "Normal on the hill" is as silent and seemingly forsaken as an Egyptian

Having celebrated the Queen's jubilee until there was no longer any fun in the thing, the English government officials have again taken up their old pastime of hunting for dynamiters. On this side of the water, when we run out of excitement or desire sensation. we don't search boys' pockets for toy pistols or suspect every man who buys a pound of powder of a desire to blow up the government. We quietly go into the back yard and tap a gas well, and if that doesn't produce the desired effect we mob the umpire. English methods are too slow for us, from statesmanship to sail boats. The Poles of Detroit are at it again.

This is Why Aon Arbor Weeps. And now indeed will the summer of Ann Arbor's content be made most dismal winter. The persistent abuse of University town has at last attracted the attention of Detroit, and after tor's suggestion to establish a clinical department of the University at Detroit, the big greedy town has come to the conclusion that it wants the department and will pay any price to get it. At a meeting of the trustees of Harper hospital, Tuesday afternoon, the matter was taken into consideration, and Gen. Alger agreed to give $10,000 as the nest-egg of a fund of $200,000 to be expended in transforming Harper hospital into a free state institution. placing it under the control of the University regents, and removing the clinical department of the University to that establishment.

The scheme may fall through, and, for the sake of our sister city, we hope it may; but we hope the present situation of affairs as regards the University will teach the newspapers and some prominent individuals of that town, one lesson, and that is that personal abuse almost invariably defeats the end it seeks to secure.

The recent killing of a member of the Tombstone G. A. R. Post, William Diehl, a miner, by a band of hostile Indians from a reservation in the vicinity, is deplored by the Post in a series Fourth of July. He said the south had of resolutions, among which is the fol-

Resolved, That we hold that the Di vine edict that if a man will not work neither shall he eat, applies with equal force to an Indian as to a white man, and that a policy with supports the one in idleness, while it punishes vagrancy in the other; which condones wholesale theft in the one, while it punishes the other if he take from the abundance of his neighbor enough merely to save the lives of his starving children; which finds excuses in their untutored savage nature for the crimes of murder and rape in the one, while it forbids to the other private revenge for the grossest wrongs —is a policy born of sickly sentimentalism and is opposed to every principle of equal rights and justice.

We would respectfully suggest to the Tombstone Post that while it may not several seasons. William Lambie's Visit to the Grave of Robert Burns-The Thatched Cottage and the Tam O'Shanter Inn.

Avr. Scotland, June 11, 1887. Editors of THE YPSILANTIAN: After breakfast this morning I walked two or three miles out in the counmonument and the beauty of the scenery to myself; climbing up the stairs cause he was a Catholic and tried to and standing between the pillars of the monument under the dome with a fine view of hills and dales, and the Doon river flowing under the auld brig, bridge), was surely a good place to catch inspiration, if any vestige of the nspiring mantle that was flung over Burns still floated in the morning breeze. And then the hackmen and the crowds came with shouting and glee, walking over the gravel walks among beautiful flowers and well kept grounds. I staved all forenoon admirng the monument and the landscape. Beside the monument there are two statues as large as life, cut out of stone, representing Tam O'Shanter and Sauter Johnny taking a wee drop. I then went over the brig of Doon (and send you some hawthorn blossoms that hung over the wall) where companies of young poem and the statues are good, but I don't like the subject; drunkenness is the besetting sin of Scotchmen, and when Burns throws the charm of his poetry around it, there is danger of its leading thoughtless young men down to ruin. The poet's father is buried before old Alloway Kirk, but there is no monument to him who set such a good example to his gifted son—and yet he ran life's mad career wild as the Altogether, the best thing Burns ever wrote to lift up mankind to a higher standard of morality and Christianity, was The Cotter's Saturday Night, and he is wholly indebted to his father for all the best thoughts in what I regard as his best poem; he sung the song that his father lived in

I went to the old Tam O'Shanter inn, which Tam left on that awful night to take his famous ride, thinking to stay over night; but it was a whisky den, more likely to prohibit good cold water than whisky. After calling on Mr. Drennen, in Ayr, with a letter from Ypsilanti, I learned that the Rev. Mr. Mc. Lean and our Ypsilanti grocer, Charles King, had been before me, I looked in the register at the monument for their or cloudy days. We saw a few. THE SONG OF FLEETING LOVE.

Love has wings as light as a bird. Guileless he looks, as a dove, of wrong; Whatever his song, be it brief or long, It still has this for an overword: Love has wings!

Though to-day the truant may stay, Though he wooes and sues and sings Only sorrow to maids he brings; Pout him and flout him, laugh him away:

Love has wings! Hold your pulses calm, unstirred— Calm and cool as a woodland pool, Let not his song your heart befool, List, through it all, for the overword:

Love has wings!

IN A FLORIDA SWAMP

Overshadowed by a Forest of Blosson Snakes in the Low Branches. Soon the forest closed in on both sides of the narrowing creek. The banks on either side were but three or four inches above water, and we could look far into the dark woods, over a dead level covered with luxuriant vegetation—some fresh. some old. Ferns of many varieties some times blocked the view with their fronds. Now and then there were patches of soil in the deep shadow, where nothing grew except the white Atamasco lily. Scores of this starry flower lit up these somber places. The creek grew more narrow and winding. The trees met overhead, and we bent our heads low to pass under the branches, stretching up our hands occasionally to break off twigs loaded with blossoms. So on for I know not how long a distance, till the boat could go no people were having a gala time. The farther, and we went ashore and loaded ourselves with flowers. A catalogue of them would be too long.

Do you ever experience the delight which is caused by meeting a familiar home flower among strange blossoms? Up here the air was filled with a fragrance which was easily traced to the small white bloom of our partridge berry much more fragrant in Florida than in ing feature of this spot is that, after you have emerged from the bottom land and ascended on the dry soil beside the swamp, you find yourself in a small forest of the sparkle berry, a tree which for beauty has hardly a rival. The blossoms, which are small and white, hang by the million on slender stems Looking up at them you are bewildered with their beauty and lavish abundance.

Day is not long enough to satisfy one who once gets into the heart of a Florida swamp in April. There are countless plants in blossom, and many more whose strange and unknown foliage leads you to wonder what their blossom will be Among these the sunshine drops through openings in the trees with dazzling effects. Great butterflies, flitting through the shadows, seem of strange and somber color, like huge night moths, and it is only when they cross one of the streaks of sunlight that you recognize your old friends, Turnus or Cresphontes or Pali medes or Ajax. Ajax more frequently puzzles you. His silvery gray wings assume all manner of tints in various lights.

Snakes, do you ask? Yes, many and mighty. So long as you are in the boat you need have no care for them, but when wandering about swamps you may as well keep a sharp lookout. colored folk seem to inherit a condensed portion of the human enmity to the serpent. Whenever one sees a snake he is possessed with a desire to exterminat him. As we rowed slowly down the river we saw here and there a moccasin hanging on a branch in the sunshine, and my boatman always wanted to stop and kill him, and I always consented.— Florida Cor. Here is a story with the scene laid in Vicksburg. It was while I was in Vicksburg starving on pea bread and dodging the Yankee shells. I was detailed to go to the commissary to do some work. The boys made it a part of their work to slip something more than was given to them when they went to the commissary, and it was always something to eat, which they would divide with us. I thought Fred Williams, Harry Tremain, Ed | that as it had come my time to go would be as good as they had been, if the opportunity afforded. That we were watched you need not doubt, and that there was reason for stealing I need not deny. But it makes me feel like a sheep thief yet,

> When I was in the commissary, I could see nothing open but a barrel of crackers. I could get to nothing better and concluded to take a good supply of them. In walking about the commissary I made it convenient to go by the barrel of hard-tacks and slip a handful in my bosom, always watching the commissary sergeant. I worked hard when he was looking at me. I never once thought about how many of the crackers I was getting into my bosom. I never noticed that my shirt body was growing to an enormous size. I was thinking of the supper that the boys would have that night. Suddenly the bottom part of my shirt slipped out from under the waistband of my pants. The sergeant was looking at me. The situation I was in can only be imagined. I was excited, and it seemed to me that there was a bushel of the darned things spilled around me. The sergeant simply said: "You had a supply," and passed on.-J. H. McDaniel in Nicolini at Vocal Practice.

When Mme. Patti is a guest at the Windsor, people passing the door of her apartments are occasionally startled by a series of nasal quacks, if they can be so described, terminating in a vocal tone that gradually becomes clear and power-The first impression produced on the listener is that some foreign fowl is essaying its vocal powers, but later developments and inquiry make known that the strange sounds are produced by Signor Nicolini at practice. Signor Nico lini begins by directing his tones toward the head, and, having "placed" them properly, sustains and strengthens them. In this method he attributes the preservation of his voice, which most tenors who sing wholly from the chest would long since have ruined by incautious use. New York Sun.
